

YOU CAN GO, BUT LEAVE MY PATIENTS

We represented a cardiology practice group in litigation to enforce a restrictive covenant agreement against a former member of the group. The defendant had resigned from the practice, and then actively solicited our client's patients and attempted to establish a competing practice within a few miles of our client's main office. Initially, we obtained a temporary restraining order against the defendant, enjoining his wrongful conduct. Following the successful TRO hearing – and without the need for further litigation -- we negotiated an agreed permanent injunction that was highly favorable to our client.
