Full Legal Services for Government Affairs in Maryland, Virginia, Washington DC and Nationwide

Shulman Rogers' attorneys routinely assist clients in developing successful government relations strategies. Interactions with government entities often arise over the course of doing business, and our Government-focused practice groups navigate clients through these opportunities, helping to explain complexities and mitigate risk. Shulman Rogers offers several services to those involved with government interactions.

For companies looking to do business with local, state or federal government branches, our Government Contracts Practice Group guides them through the challenging regulatory waters. We assist with a wide range of needs for government contractors, from the creation of competitive bids and RFPs to protests and litigation if things go wrong.

Our Government Relations and Resources attorneys serve clients involved in lobbying and public policy. We take the time to understand our client's goals, allowing us to craft a comprehensive strategy to achieve their objectives. Our attorneys also represent clients appearing before governmental departments, ensuring that policymakers and representatives thoroughly understand each client's business and make an informed decision.

When businesses find themselves subject to government investigations, they turn to our Government Investigations Practice Group. Our attorneys have represented individuals and companies in government investigations and civil and criminal litigation involving the SEC, FINRA, the DOJ, the PCAOB and other regulatory and criminal authorities. We also offer proactive representation, advising companies who believe an investigation may be pending, providing regulatory and compliance assistance to avoid an investigation in the first place. When intensive litigation is the best approach, our group holds a strong record of success in achieving favorable outcomes.
