Schyler Bailey is a skilled litigator who brings a wealth of experience to the Shulman Rogers Commercial Litigation and Real Estate teams. With a focus in construction law, she works directly with clients to manage risk by drafting, reviewing and revising construction contracts for commercial construction clients, including subcontractors, contractors, design professionals and owners. This approach positions the client for success before the project begins by mitigating risk during project performance and providing an avenue for resolution when issues arise.

Clients frequently ask Schyler to review, revise and/or draft construction contract documents, including, but not limited to, AIA contract documents, private contracts, government contracts, purchase orders and standard conditions of performance. She also handles all types of construction claims from inception to resolution, including State contract claims, delay claims, performance and payment bond claims, mechanics' liens, breach of contract claims and various payment issues. Schyler specializes in analyzing, calculating and supporting construction damages, both to help her clients recover money and to discredit claims filed against them.
